Weston had two nearly fatal accidents last week, in the first of which Winslow Hale put three sticks of dynamite under a rock, touched it off and then, when it failed to explode, went up closer to investigate. The gravel was blown into his face and he was quite badly hurt. Soon after, George Clayton became buried in a cave-in of sand, which covered him about two feet out of sight. His head and body were badly bruised and one leg was broken above the knee. He was takon out for dead, but will recover.
